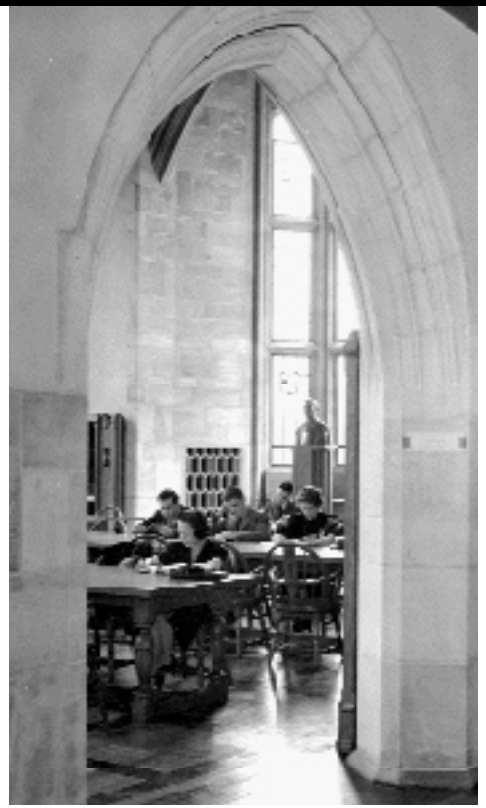
TEMPLE UNIVERSITY LIBRARIES



"When I came to Temple, I had never had such riches as I saw all around me in the Sullivan library. I remember poring over periodicals and reference works I'd never seen before, and taking out more books than I could possibly ever read. I used to look at my bursar's card with delight; it was my passport to these wonderful things!"

At the heart of every great university is a great library.

The mission of Temple University Libraries is to provide high-quality resources and state-of-the-art information services to meet the needs of Temple University's students, scholars and instructors, as well as the broader community, and to preserve the cultural, historical and research record for future generations.

Students, faculty and researchers today depend not only on books and journals, but also on the latest electronic information and resources.

With the support of alumni and friends like you, the University Libraries are able to uphold this mission and make enhancements that truly affect library users.

SERVICES AND COLLECTIONS

The Libraries Collections include more than 3 million volumes; subscriptions to 51,000 journals and serials and electronic access to over 450 research databases.

Materials in the collection date from 1581 and include rare books and pamphlets, prints, photographs, slave narratives, manuscripts, letters, art and artifacts as well as thousands of taped interviews and radio programs on African and African American history and culture.
